Hi Tanya,
Below is my exchange with the NZ examiner of Kelly Roe's thesis.
Cheers,
Justine.

Hi [REDACTED]

That's fine - I think keep the e-copies, rather than deleting them. (We don't have a policy on this.)

Cheers,

Justine.

Hi Justine,

I am sorry if I caused any confusion. I can't recall what I did with it. I can't find the thesis online or in the library's secure display case, which is what Kelly will have done. I do know that I had the comments removed from the version during the last submission. I used the original version that I sent to Waikato. Kelly doesn't need to worry that there is another version of her thesis with comments in it at another university. The comments on the version first sent to me were all entered into the word document that I sent to Waikato. I don't even have any electronic documents with comments other than those sent to Waikato.

Would it be best for me to delete the e-copies of the thesis? At [REDACTED], we usually keep these, and keep the hard copies, but I understand that different universities have different practices.

Thanks, [REDACTED] - not to worry - it isn't something you would normally expect to ever have need of again! Did you write anything in the hard copy? If not, at least we can assure Kelly of that.

Cheers,

Justine.

Dear Justine,

My apologies! This is the worst reply possible: I can't recall what I did with it. I can't find it in my office, but I also can't recall putting it in the university's secure disposal bin, which is what I would have done if I had thrown it out. When I did the comparison between the versions during this last submission, I used the e-copies of the thesis.

Thank you for the opportunity to be the examiner for the thesis. ! I really wanted to pass the thesis, but it just had too many problems. It is a topic that I enjoy and think matters. And, of course, I have a lot of respect for the supervisor. I am sorry that it turned into such a negative experience for everyone.

Best wishes,

Dear [REDACTED]

Thanks for sending back your copy of Kelly Roe's thesis (and, of course, for examining it so thoroughly!) Do you happen to still have your copy of her earlier submission, and if so, could you send it back to us as well? (Kelly is being litigious, and there is a line in our regulations which says that theses will be returned to the student.) Not to worry, of course, if you've already thrown it out.

Best wishes,

Justine.
